child knew Solis as a centenarian. They have for ad in 1712 his signature among those of persons who contributed to the building of a Franciscan convent which exists near San Sebastian. His skin i like parchment, his long hair of the whiteness of snow envelops his head like a turban, and his look is so keen that it made a disag, ecable impression on the Doctor. Interrogated by the Dector, he answered complaisantly that his great agwas due to his regular mode of living. and to his never giving up to any excess of any sort whatever.

"I never eat but owce a day," said he, "but I never use any but the strongest and most nourishing foods. My meals last a half hour, for I believe it is impossible to eat more in that time than the body can digest on twenty-four hours. I fast the 6- and fifteenth day of each, mouth, and on those days I drink as much water as I can bear. I always let my food become cold before I touch It. It is to these things that I attribute my great age."

Through the Weary Hours Of many a night, made doubly long by its protracted agony, the rheumatic sufferer tosses to and fro on his sleepless couch, vainly praying for that rest which only comes by fits and starts. His malady is one which ordinary "nedicines too often fail to relieve but there is ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood leparent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, affords he rheumatic a reliable means of relief. Check the malady in its incipient stages, when the first premonitory twinges come on, with this agreeable medicine, and avoid years of torture. Whatever be the rationale of the active infinence of the Bitters upon this maindy, certain it is that no evidence relating to its effect is more direct and positive than that which relates to its action in cases of rheumatism. Like all sterling remedies, however, it deserves a profracted, systematic trial, and should not be abandoned because not at once remedial. It is equally efficacions in dyspepsia, indigestion equally efficacions in dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred diseases.

At the Friedensville (Pa.) zinc mines there is in operation the largest stationary engine in the world. During the last few months it has pumped dry by underground drainage nearly every orepit, spring and small stream within a radius of five miles. The engine i known as the "President," is of 5,000horse power, and is run by sixteen boilers. At each revolution of its ponderons wheels a small stream is thrown out, the number of gallons raised every minute being 17,500. The driving-wheels are thirty-five feet in diameter, and weigh stons each. The sweep-rod is forty

The cylinder is 110 inches in diameter, while the piston-rod is 18 inches in diameter and makes a ten-foot stroke. The engine has a ballast box capable of holding sixty tons, and to feed the boilers twenty-eight tons of coal are required daily. On the engine is the largest nut in the world. It is hexagonal in shape and weighs 1,600 pounds. To tighten or loosen this not twenty men are required, while the wrench that fits it is twenty feet long. From the end of the walking beam of the engine to the bottom of the shaft the distance is 300 feet. The masonry on which the engine rests is 108 feet deep, some of the foundation stones weighing five tons.

Walking Fishes.

It may seem absurd to speak of tishe as walking. The flying fish is well known, but its flight looks much like swimming in the air. We naturally think of fishes as using all the time it water; as being incapable, in fact, of living anywhere else. But nature maintains no hard and fast lines of dis tinction between animal life which be longs on the land and that which be longs to the water. If we can believe the accounts of naturalists, and there are no grounds for doubting themthere are fishes that traverse dry land and others that walk on the bottom of

It is reported that Dr. Francis Day. of India, has collected several instances of the migration of fishes by land from one piece of water to another. Layard once met some perch-like fishes traveling along a hot and dusty gravel road at midday. Humbold' saw a species of dorns leaping over the dry ground, supply ted by its pectoral fins; and he was fold of another specimen that had climbed a hillock over twenty feet in height. A French naturalist published in the "Transactions of the Linnean Society of Normandy," 1842, an account of his observations on the ambulatory movements of the gurnard at the bottom of the sea. He observed these movements in one of the artificial sea-ponds or fishing-traps, surrounded by nets, on the shere of Normandy. He saw a score of gurnards close their fins against their sides like the wings of a fly in repose, and, without any movement of their tails, walk along the bottom by means of six free rays, three on each pectoral fin, which they placed successively on the ground.

They moved rapidly forward and backward, to the right and left, groping in all directions with these rays, as if in search of small crabs. Their great heads and bodies seemed to throw hardly any weight on the slender rays or feet, being suspended in water, and having their weight further diminished by their swimming bladders. When the naturalist moved in the water the fish swam away rapidly to the extremity of the pond; when he stood still they resumed their walking and came between his legs. On dissection the three anterior rays on each pectoral fin are found to be supported each with a strong muscular apparatus to direct its movements. apart from the muscles that are connected with the smaller rays of the pectoral fin.

From Sciatic Rheumatism n my logs and arms, and was confined to my bed tire'y helpless. In August I was just able to move around. I was reduced to a mere skeleton, my appetite was entirely gone and my friends thought I could not live. I took almost everything I could hear of, but with no good results, during that winter. One day, reading about taking Hood's Sarsaparilla in March, April and May, I concluded to try it. One bottle gave me so much relief that I took four bettles, and since then I have not been troubled with rheumatism, and my general health has never been better.
